

Gypsy Moth Caterpillar

The larvae of the gypsy moth eat the leaves of trees and shrubs. Because gypsy moths lay so many eggs, an outbreak of gypsy moth larvae can seriously damage forests and gardens. Trying to control their populations costs an estimated average of $30 million a year.